The Amildar's report of 15-12-08 deals with the facts of the case in detail

It is stated that there is no definite govt order directing that the Prasada &c should be presented to H.H the Maharaja

Wherever he may be residing at the time. In the year under dispute (1908) the Shaniko who carried the Prasada to Mysore instead of to the place where H.H. the Maharaja of Mysore was residing at the time, have deposed that it is the uniform practice in the temple to ascertain (a month before the utsavam) the place where H.H. the Maharaja was likely to be at the time and obtain orders every year as to the place where the prasada had to be presented, that no such correspondence was made in the year under reference and that the Peshkar of the temple refused to give them trainage, carriage &c to take the Prasada to the ~~place~~ place of H.H. the Maharaja's residence. There are numerous extracts in the file (filed by the Peshkar) of the correspondence which took place in the preceding years about this subject. From these it seems to have been the uniform practice to take the Prasada every year to H.H. the Maharaja in person wherever he may be at the time Special trainage, Carthire &c have been incurred for this purpose on occasions when H.H. the Maharaja was not at Mysore. This uniform practice ~~and~~ seems to have been recognised and upheld by Govt in Mily. Secrys No. 37/25 & 27-7-01 and No. 36 & 18-7-1893. Under these circumstances it is a point for orders whether any special Govt order is necessary now. The omission in 1908 to take the Prasada to H.H the Maharaja in person, seems to have been due more to the neglect of the then Peshkar in obtaining instructions from the higher authorities as had been done in previous years than ~~and not~~ to any absence ~~want~~ of definite orders of Govt in the matter.
